Publisher Praises Work of Southside Electric Cooperative Dir

Farmville Civic Leader Says Southside Electric Contributes Much to 'Solid Rural Economy' in

It takes many organizations and corporations working together to build a solid rural economy — and the Southside Electric Cooperative need not take a back seat in any such group — is the appraisal given this electric distributions program by one of Southside Virginia's most distinguished editors and civic leaders.

J. Barrye Wall, of Farmville, for many years publisher of the Farmville Herald, says he speaks about the work and contributions of the Southside Electric Cooperative "from first - hand information."

"I know these folks both in management and in policy making," he said in discussing the organization with T. Dayton Dillon, of Darlington Heights, one of the directors on the Board which operates the Cooperative.

"They are home folks; people who know the problems here in Southside Virginia, and people who know some of the solutions to the problems. I don't think they know all of the solutions, none of us know all the answers," he said.

"But when it comes to the decisions needed to make the program of this organization really worthwhile, these directors understand their responsibilities.

"There is never any one group that contributes everything to worthwhile progress," Mr. Wall said. "It takes many organizations and corporations working together to build a solid rural economy," he continued.

"And the Southside Electric Cooperative has played its part well," he emphasized.

He continued:

"For more than 25 years now, the directors of this Cooperative, have continued to build this service with the thought of rural Southside Virginia in mind.

"Many rural people have the benefit of electricity on their farms and in their homes through their cooperation in providing rights-of-way and power lines. A system of electric energy criscrosses the entire countryside bringing much needed power to every farm home.

"Southside Electric has operated as a home-business. Each areas has a director, who, with directors from other areas, form the Board of Directors. These men know the needs of the patrons, their problems and their desires. Their first-hand knowledge places each director in the position of being able to serve his patrons to their best interests. I believe this is one thing that made the Southside Electric Cooperative strong and successful.

"Because there are so many who are interested in it — I think there are about 17,000 Southside Virginians who, as members, control this service— always there are those who express themselves on the program and the policies.

"Whenever this happens, it makes for good in the organization. It keeps the policy makers — the directors, alert to the needs and more able to meet these needs. It keeps the management alert to the of operation, and of the policies under operate.

"Yes, the Southside Cooperative is my opinion, included Mr. Wall, has done much in the betterment of solid rural economy in Virginia.

"This program is an outstanding example of people helping themselves. And they have made contributions and effort in the part development. I, as Director from my neer in this work, early booster, many thousands of miles, endless hours in the service for the rural this area.

"I feel certain the Southside Electric Cooperative will continue its policies and serve this section of Virginia and will continue to provide for the living," he added.

STINKS!

A drunk lyin on the floor of a bar began to show signs of life, so one of the customers smeared a little limburger cheese on his upper lip.

The drunk arose slowly and walked out of the door. In a few minutes he came back in. Then he went out again only to return in a few minutes.

Shaking his head with disgust, he said: "It's no use, the whole world stinks."
